Aged Mother Is Prostrate.

Bywater's aged mother is prostrated be cause of the slaying of her son, and she is joined by many relatives of the family Four War Ships Purchased for Use and friends of the dead man in her mourning. There were few people in the county who numbered their friends by the score as did Bywater, and his partisans come from every rank of society.

His bride of but an hour, Viola Strother-Bywater, is lying at the point of death at the house of her sister, Mrs. Nellie Gaines, wife of Edward Gaines, one of the eyewitnesses of the tragedy.

In her delirium, the young girl calls to her brothers not to shoot him down. James and Philip Strother, who shot him as he was about to leave his wife's out trinkets. That Bywater only intended to return to Culpeper and spend the night at his mother's home, after having promised to do so, is the claim made by his friends. This is borne out by the aged mother, who says her boy Will had promised to come home that night. She also says that she knew nothing about the proposed marriage. For the reason that they believe Bywater intended to go no farther than Culpeper, his friends contend the Strothers acted hastily, and their refusal to go to the wounded man's aid before be died is commented upon severely.
